

We are currently leading a project with the Permaculture Association UK looking at documenting the impact we have on visitors' wellbeing. By counting the number of times visitors mention particular themes we can see what areas we are doing best at and what we could focus on more.

Using comments from our visitors' book from 2014-2017 we have investigated the balance of impacts we have on the 5 ways to wellbeing. These are a set of "Five evidence based actions which promote people's wellbeing" developed by the new economics foundation and recognised as a standard method by many organisations and funding bodies.

With around 1000 visitors a year and 3 full years of data we can give a well supported idea of how visiting a permaculture project impacts wellbeing.

As you can see, visitors to the Red Shed tell us that we have improved all aspects of their wellbeing.

We recently published an article in permaculture magazine in which we explain how to do this analysis for your own projects. If you would like any more information feel free to get in touch!

With enough data you can use this method to help in funding applications, designing courses and engaging visitors.
